Former Trump aide Manafort found guilty on eight of 18 charges

The president's former campaign chairman faces up to 80 years in prison.

Paul Manafort GETTY IMAGES

Former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort was found guilty on Tuesday on eight charges of tax and bank fraud and failing to disclose foreign bank accounts, after a jury said it could not reach consensus on the other 10 charges against him.

Jurors, after almost four days of deliberations, found Manafort guilty of two of nine bank fraud charges, all five tax fraud charges he faced and one of four charges of failing to disclose foreign bank accounts.

Judge T.S. Ellis declared a mistrial on 10 of the 18 counts, after the jury told him it could not reach a verdict on those charges.

Manafort stood quietly while the verdict was being read by the clerk. At the conclusion, the prosecutors hugged one another and then the prosecution and the defense shook hands.

Manafort's lawyer, Kevin Downing, told reporters afterward that his client was disappointed in the verdict and was evaluating his options.

The trial of Manafort, a veteran Republican operative, was the first stemming from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of Russia's role in the 2016 U.S. election. The charges against Manafort largely predate his work on President Donald Trump's successful campaign.

But the verdict appeared to be at least a partial victory for Mueller, whose probe Trump has repeatedly criticized.

Manafort's conviction on the eight counts came on the same day as Trump's former personal lawyer, Michael Cohen, pleaded guilty in New York to campaign finance violations and other charges.

Manafort was convicted on two of the most serious counts — bank fraud — each of which carries a prison term of up to 30 years. Reports say Manafort could face up to 80 years in prison.

Mark Warner, the senior Democrat on the U.S. Senate Intelligence Committee, said in a statement that the Manafort verdict refuted Trump's repeated charge that the investigation was a "witch hunt."

He warned that any attempt by Trump to use his presidential powers to pardon Manafort or interfere in Mueller's probe "would be a gross abuse of power and require immediate action by Congress."

In the Alexandria, Virginia, courtroom, Ellis gave the prosecution until Aug. 29 to decide whether to retry Manafort on the charges on which the jury deadlocked. As a result, the judge did not set a sentencing date for the other charges.

After the jury was dismissed, the judge told Manafort to stand at the podium and told him to help prepare the sentencing report. "The government and Mr. Manafort received very effective and zealous representation," the judge said. REUTERS

Paul Manafort mistrial: What does it mean?

Paul Manafort was convicted Tuesday of eight counts of federal crimes. The jury deadlocked on 10 other counts, leading the judge to declare a mistrial on those other charges.

The convictions were the first test of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation and "may strengthen Mueller's hand as he continues to investigate possible conspiracy and seeks an interview with the president," The Washington Post said after the verdict. CNN called the convictions a "major victory for special counsel Robert Mueller."

A complete acquittal would have provided Trump's allies with ammunition to shut down the investigation, which some in the GOP have demanded for months.

"As a legal matter, this is a complete and total defeat for Manafort," tweeted former federal prosecutor Renato Mariotti. "He will get the same sentence that he would have received if he was convicted on all 18 counts. The number of counts of conviction doesn't impact federal sentencing." MICHAEL MARTIN

Cohen, in guilty plea, says made payments at candidate's direction

President Donald Trump's former personal lawyer, Michael Cohen, pleaded guilty in New York on Tuesday to campaign finance violations and other charges, saying he made payments to influence the 2016 election at the direction of a candidate for federal office.

Cohen, 51, appearing in federal court in Manhattan, pleaded guilty to one count of willfully causing an unlawful corporate campaign contribution and one count of making an excessive campaign contribution.

Cohen, one of Trump's closest associates for more than a decade, said he arranged to make payments "for [the] principal purpose of influencing [the]election" at the direction of a candidate for federal office. He did not give the candidate's name.

Michael Cohen GETTY IMAGES

Porn star Stormy Daniels has said Cohen paid her $130,000 shortly before the November 2016 election to keep quiet about a 2006 sexual encounter with Trump.

In addition, Cohen recorded a conversation with Trump two months before the election in which they discussed buying the rights to a story by former Playboy model Karen McDougal, who said she had an affair with Trump, lawyer Rudy Giuliani said last month.

Sentencing for Dec. 12 and set bail

Under U.S. election law, campaign contributions, defined as things of value given to a campaign in order to influence an election, must be disclosed. A payment intended to silence allegations of an affair just before an election could constitute a campaign contribution, some experts have said.

Cohen, who once said he would "take a bullet" for Trump, agreed to a plea bargain with federal prosecutors earlier Tuesday. He also pleaded guilty to five counts of tax fraud and one count of making false statements to a financial institution.

The plea deal includes a possible sentence of up to five years and three months in prison, Judge William Pauley III said during the hearing. REUTERS

Thank You To Our Customers

Thank you for your patience this summer during the first phases of the Southwest Connection Improvement Program. Over the past two weeks, hundreds of volunteer SEPTA Ambassadors were deployed throughout the system to assist customers, and we are very grateful for your understanding as we continue to rebuild SEPTA for the future.

The Southwest Connection Improvement Program will renew 80 year old infrastructure on an integral rail connection that supports service on the Media/Elwyn, Wilmington/Newark and Airport Lines. Around-the-clock work from August 4th through the 19th allowed SEPTA crews to make critical safety and reliability improvements to track, power and signal infrastructure and perform heavy maintenance work that is not possible while the tracks are in service.

SEPTA's ongoing efforts to improve Regional Rail service and reliability took big steps this summer. In addition to the Southwest Connection Improvement Program, SEPTA also debuted its new Siemens ACS-64 locomotives. These 15, state-of-the-art, electric locomotives will replace eight aging engines and allow SEPTA to expand our fleet.

Following the passage of Act 89, Pennsylvania's landmark transportation investment plan, SEPTA made a commitment to you – our customers – as well as the region and the taxpayers to swiftly address a state of good repair backlog that exceeded $5 billion. We are fulfilling that promise.

Throughout all five counties, SEPTA is investing hundreds of millions of dollars every year in track, bridges, power substations, safety systems and new vehicles – critical investments that are improving service reliability and preserving the SEPTA system for future generations.

Every day at SEPTA begins with the same goal: to safely carry you to and from work, school or wherever else your travels take you. Projects like the Southwest Connection Improvement Program help ensure that SEPTA will be able to meet this responsibility for decades to come. Thank you for your patience and understanding as we continue to make long-term improvements system wide.

Trump's coal emissions rollback will hurt environment, experts say

Environmentalists predict an increase in deaths, asthma, and sick days if rollbacks are implemented.

SAM NEWHOUSE

The Trump administration's proposed new "Affordable Clean Energy" rule on coal-powered plants, which would reverse an Obama-era regulation that would have required coal power operations to reduce their carbon emissions over the next several years, sent waves of shock and horror through environmentalists who say the rule could have serious impacts on the health of Americans.

"This plan could make things worse, especially when combined with all the other rollbacks to climate laws from the federal level," said Flora Cardoni, a climate defender campaign director with PennEnvironment. "The Trump plan would release 12 times as much carbon dioxide into the air compared to the Obama rule, three million more tons of greenhouse gases released into the air."

Obama announced the Clean Power Plan three years ago, in August 2015, the first-ever national standards addressing carbon pollution from power plants. The rule never officially took effect, after it was delayed by the courts. Trump's proposed rule likewise won't take immediate effect, and is now open for a public comment period ahead of the final rule later this year.

Trump's proposal indicates that states would be responsible for setting their own emissions standards. But higher emissions anywhere will affect the rest of the nation, Cardoni said.

"Air pollution does not stay within borders, that's a large part of the problem," she said. "The continued reliance on these 19th-century power sources is truly a recipe for disaster, especially when we have cleaner, safer, renewable sources of energy available."

By 2030, Cardoni said, higher carbon emissions under Trump's rule are estimated to impact public health by, each year, causing 3,600 deaths, 90,000 asthma attacks and 300,000 missed work days.

"Pennsylvanians want a safer environment, and we believe that we should not have to suffer from a federal government that's reversing all of our progress and making people sick," Cardoni said. "If the Obama clean power plan was implemented at a national level we would see huge benefits to our climate and health."

Steve Hvozdovich, the Pennsylvania Campaigns Director at Clean Water Action, said the move was a natural extension of Trump exiting the Paris Climate Accords. The two main impacts, he said, will be worsening public health due to increased carbon emissions and delaying the implementation of renewable energy technology.

"As we continue to keep ourselves beholden to dirty sources of energy, we prevent ourselves from moving forward and developing more renewable sources of energy," Hvozdovich said. "We're allowing an industry that is dirty and is putting out emissions that impact people's health to continue to operate as usual and even relaxing the need for upgrades."

He urged the public to submit comments to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) pushing back against this change.

"This is a much bigger issue than just one state. This is a national issue, a world issue: combatting climate change," he said.

Jean McIntosh, right, got 40 years after pleading guilty to her role in the Tacony dungeon scheme masterminded by her mother, Linda Weston. PPD

Daughter of Tacony dungeon 'mastermind' gets 40 years

A woman who participated in the infamous "Tacony dungeon" schem- was sentenced to 40 years in prison on Tuesday.

sam.newhouse@metro.us

It was one of the most disturbing cases in recent Philadelphia history, sparked by a horrifying discovery in 2011. Four mentally disabled adults were found chained to a boiler in the basement of a Tacony rowhome. Later dubbed the Tacony dungeon, authorities discovered that the location was used to imprison mentally disabled adults while their captors pocketed their disability benefit checks.

On Tuesday, Jean McIntosh, 38, the daughter of previously sentenced mastermind Linda Ann Weston, was sentenced to 40 years in federal prison after pleading guilty to her role in the Tacony Dungeon scheme.

Not only were multiple disabled adults shuttled back and forth across state lines to elude authorities, federal prosecutors said, but they were tortured and starved while kept prisoner in the Tacony Dungeon, and two people died while imprisoned as a result of their mistreatment.

"It is hard to fathom this kind of disregard for the dignity of human life," U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania William T. McSwain said in a statement. "The stomach-turning details of this case and unspeakable acts of cruelty McIntosh inflicted on her helpless victims serve as a stark reminder that pure evil does exist in the world. My sincere hope is that today's sentence brings some measure of closure to the victims and their families."

Weston previously pleaded guilty and was sentenced to life in prison plus 80 years for operating the dungeon scam from 2001 to 2011, during the course of which two individuals, Donna Spadea and Maxine Lee, died from maltreatment.

Weston, McIntosh, Gregory Thomas, Eddie Wright and Nicklaus Woodward were all charged with hate crimes in a 196-count indictment for targeting the mentally disabled.

Federal prosecutors said the criminal organization that they dubbed "the Weston family" targeted disabled adults living alone and offered them a home or lured them with the promise of romantic relationships.

"It is hard to fathom this kind of disregard for the dignity of human life."

William T. McSwain, U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

But victims instead were confined in basements, closets, attics and other locked rooms; starved, tortured and beaten, sedated with drugs, and moved between locations in Virginia, Texas, Florida and eventually Philadelphia. Weston and McIntosh allegedly collected the victims' Social Security checks and state benefits in some cases. The victims were forced to sign paperwork designating Linda Weston as their benefits payee.

Pottsville priest charged with groping teenage girl

ISTOCK

The arrest of Father Kevin Lonergan was unrelated to last week's grand jury report.

A Catholic priest who prosecutors said groped a 17-year-old girl from his Allentown, Pennsylvania, parish was arrested on Tuesday and charged with assault and corruption of a minor, authorities said.

Father Kevin Lonergan, 30, was also accused of sending naked pictures of himself to the girl, identified only as "Jane Doe," after obtaining her cell phone number from another member of his congregation, Lehigh County District Attorney Jim Martin said at a press conference.

"Many of the communications were sexual in nature, and he sent her nude images of himself over Snapchat," Martin said of Lonergan, who lives with his parents in Pottsville, Pennsylvania.

Lonergan was charged with one count each of corrupting a minor and indecent assault, Martin said, and faces up to nine years in prison if convicted at trial.

It was not immediately clear if Lonergan had retained a criminal defense attorney. A telephone number obtained for Lonergan by Reuters did not appear to be working on Tuesday.

He was taken into custody one week after Pennsylvania's attorney general released a nearly 900-page grand jury report about sexual abuse by some 300 Catholic priests in Pennsylvania based on documents from secret archives kept by the archdiocese.

Lonergan's arrest, stemming from incidents in December 2017 and January 2018, was unrelated to the grand jury report, Martin said.

The attorney general said the report, which followed a two-year investigation, was the most comprehensive report on Catholic clergy sex abuse in American history, nearly two decades after an expose of widespread abuse and cover-up in Boston rocked the Roman Catholic church.

"Many of the communications were sexual in nature, and he sent her nude images of himself over Snapchat."

Lehigh County District Attorney Jim Martin

The girl reported the contact to priests at Central Catholic High School in Allentown, Martin said. The Allentown Diocese removed Lonergan from his duties after prosecutors alerted them to the case, he said.

"The diocese cooperated fully with the law enforcement investigation," the Allentown Diocese said in a statement on Tuesday. REUTERS

Escort who claimed to have recordings proving Russian meddling says she made hush deal

Anastasia Vashukevich once said she had audio recordings linking Russian oligarch Oleg Deripaska to Trump's election.

letters@metro.us

A Belarusian escort who briefly broke the internet by claiming to have audio proving that Russia meddled in the U.S. election says she's made a deal to keep quiet.

Anastasia Vashukevich, also known as Nastya Ribka, was arrested in Thailand last February along with her boyfriend, self-titled "sex guru" Alexander Kirillov (aka Alex Lesley). Both have been in custody there since.

At the time of her arrest, Vashukevich said she had information linking Russian oligarch Oleg Deripaska to the election of Trump. Deripaska was the longtime benefactor of Trump's onetime campaign manager Paul Manafort, who was convicted on eight federal felony charges on Tuesday. Deripaska paid Manafort millions to promote a pro-Russia political candidate in Ukraine, and Manafort was accused of hiding that money from the U.S. government.

In February, Vashukevich appealed to the U.S. for asylum, suggesting she would turn over the recordings.

But on Monday in a Pattaya, Thailand, courtroom, she told an Associated Press reporter that she had turned over the audio recordings to Deripaska and that Americans, not Russians, who were persecuting her.

"You'll have to ask Deripaska," Vashukevich said when asked what was on the recordings.

Vashukevich — who had previously said she provided "escort" services to Deripaska — said that she would no longer talk about the matter and had been promised something in return. "He promised me a little something already," said Vashukevich. "If he do that then there will be no problem, but if he don't …" she shrugged and smiled.

Vashukevich and Kirillov were arrested at a Pattaya sex-training seminar along with six other people and charged with solicitation and conspiracy to solicit. If convicted, they could face ten years in prison. Kirillov said his the course taught "how to impress girls" and "how to get girls' numbers," and didn't involve sex. "We are not sure about Thai law, but in Russia this is not a criminal case," he told a judge on Monday.

BRIEF

Magnitude 7.3 quake hits northern Venezuela coast

A major earthquake of magnitude 7.3 struck the northern coast of Venezuela on Tuesday and shook buildings as far away as the capital, Caracas, the U.S. Geological Survey said

The quake was centered near the town of Carupano, an area of poor fishing communities and was felt as far away as neighboring Colombia to the east and nearby island nations like Trinidad and Tobago, and St. Lucia, to the west and north.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or damage, Venezuelan Interior Minister Nestor Reverol said in an internet broadcast on Tuesday.

The U.S. Pacific Tsunami Center said the quake could cause small tsunami waves along the coast near the epicenter, 23 miles southwest of the town of Carupano.

USGS Geophysicist Jessica Turner said the quake's depth, 76.5 miles below the surface, would dampen some of the shaking but not enough to prevent damage.

"A 7.3 magnitude quake is going to cause some damage particularly as in this area structures are vulnerable. The Earth is able to absorb some of the energy, but a 7.3 quake produces a lot of energy," she said by telephone.

Turner said the quake's depth caused the quake to be felt as far away such as in Caracas. REUTERS

Asia Argento denies sexual relations with actor she paid off

Italian actress Asia Argento, an outspoken advocate in the movement against sexual harassment, denied on Tuesday ever having had sexual relations with Jimmy Bennett, an actor who The New York Times reported had accused her of sexual assault.

The New York Times reported on Sunday that Bennett had accused Argento of sexually assaulting him in 2013 when he was 17 and she was 37. Argento agreed to pay him $380,000 after he asked for $3.5 million, the paper said.

"I am deeply shocked and hurt by having read news that is absolutely false. I have never had any sexual relationship with Bennett," Argento said in an emailed statement distributed by her Italian lawyer.

In her first public comments since the article, Argento said she had been linked to Bennett over several years "by friendship only".

Representatives for Bennett did not immediately respond to requests for comment on the matter.

A spokesperson for The New York Times told Reuters: "We are confident in the accuracy of our reporting, which was based on verified documents and multiple sources."

Argento said in her statement that Bennett had "unexpectedly made an exorbitant request of money" to her following her media exposure in the accusations of sexual misconduct against movie producer Harvey Weinstein.

Argento was one of the first women to publicly accuse Weinstein. She told The New Yorker magazine last October that he had raped her during the Cannes festival in 1997 when she was 21. Since that interview, she has become an outspoken advocate in the #MeToo social media movement against sexual harassment.

She said in her statement that she and her then-boyfriend, the culinary television star Anthony Bourdain, had "decided to deal compassionately with Bennett's demand for help and give it to him."

"Anthony personally undertook to help Bennett economically, upon the condition that we would no longer suffer any further intrusions in our life," she added.

Bourdain killed himself in June.

Argento said she would oppose the "false allegations" against her and would assume "all necessary initiatives for my protection before all competent venues."

Facebook is giving users a trustworthy rating to help prevent 'fake news'

The social network is giving its users a rating from zero to 1 to help determine trustworthiness.

lenyon.whitaker@metro.us

Facebook is starting to implement a new system in which it will give users a credibility score to rate users' trustworthiness on the social network in an effort to stop the spreading of fake news.

According to a detailed report by The Washington Post, the Facebook trustworthiness rating is a system gives users a "reputation score" and give users a score from zero to 1. The report did not indicate if the score would be just the two numbers zero or one, or if the rating would be in increments in tenths (0.1, 0.2, 0.3 ...).

The Post reported that the reputation rating system has been in effect over the past year and is part of Facebook's enhanced methods to fight against fake news stories and content that violates Facebook's Community Standards.

Facebook product manager Tessa Lyons told The Washington Post that the social network has been using information provided by its users to help quell the spread of misinformation on Facebook. Whenever you flag a post as spam or malicious or report a friend request you believe is phony, Facebook will assign you a rating based partly on how accurate you have been in flagging or reporting fake or malicious posts or spotting phony Facebook accounts.

According to the Post, the trustworthiness score is one of the thousands of different "behavioral clues" used to help Facebook understand what it needs to dig deeper in to to determine if flagged content violates its policies.

"One of the signals we use is how people interact with articles," Lyons told the Post in an email. "For example, if someone previously gave us feedback that an article was false and the article was confirmed false by a fact-checker, then we might weight that person's future false-news feedback more than someone who indiscriminately provides false-news feedback on lots of articles, including ones that end up being rated as true."

THE FASTEST RENTER GETS THE APARTMENT!
Finding a decent apartment is hard. There aren't a lot of them — weird floor plans, lack of natural light, showers in the kitchen and other miseries. And that's before figuring in your commute, nearby amenities, etc. But eventually, you find it. It's probably not perfect, but it ticks enough boxes and you've seen enough places and the deadline is looming, so you say yes. Ah, but it's not a done deal. Now comes the Amazing Race portion. You're on the clock against the other people also glimpsing the light at the end of the apartment hunting tunnel. Instead of sighing with relief, you're running to your bank for a certified check (which costs $20, as if the process of moving weren't expensive enough) then rushing to submit your application. We did this on the sofa in our broker's living room at 8:30 p.m. the same day. I remember him commending our hustle — instead of a compliment, it was one of our earliest realizations about how uncivilized city living can be.

Virgo Try something new. Make a point to do something that will make your and your family's lives better. A move or educational pursuit will pay off.

Libra Head in the direction that shows the most promise. There is no point wasting your time on something or someone immovable. Make your time and effort count.

Scorpio A business trip or discussion that will help you bring about personal change will pay off. A change of location, position or partnership is favored.

Sagittarius Your appeal will be on the rise when it comes to work, reputation or personal status. Stand tall and discuss what you want to see happen. Be true to your beliefs.

Capricorn A different approach to work or how you earn your living will improve your life. A new workspace at home or a change of pace or surroundings will make a difference moving forward.

Aquarius Look at your relationships carefully. Size up who is good for you and who isn't. Back away from those trying to entice you into things you know you shouldn't be doing.

Pisces What you do for those who cannot do for themselves will be rewarded. A gift or investment opportunity should be handled responsibly. Excessive generosity will be your downfall. EUGENIA LAST

Brendan Gleeson talks 'Mr. Mercedes' and ice cream trucks

"Mr. Mercedes" returns Wednesday night. AT&T AUDIENCE NETWORK

The Irish actor best known for "In Bruges" and "Harry Potter" stars in another Stephen King adaptation.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

While discussing the second season of "Mr. Mercedes," the AT&T Audience Network series adapted from the Stephen King novel of the same name, over the phone with star Brendan Gleeson, an ice cream truck surprised the Irish actor.

"Oh geez," he exclaims. "An ice cream truck just went by while we were talking here, which is a little bit eerie. I suspect Brady would have tried to stick his little head out the window and do something nasty. That was honestly quite bizarre."

The "Brady" Gleeson refers to is Brady Hartsfield, the show's titular serial killed as played by English actor Harry Treadaway. "Mr. Mercedes" season two picks up where season one left off, with, Gleeson's character Bill Hodges suffering a heart attack and Treadaway undergoing an invasive hospital procedure as a result of their final confrontation. While the retired detective turned private investigator endures physical rehabilitation, the killer remains comatose.

And this is where things take an interesting turn, because Gleeson has previously said he's "not big on the supernatural." Unlike most Stephen King-inspired fare, like the 2017 film adaptation of "It" and Hulu's "Castle Rock," the first season of "Mr. Mercedes" is entirely devoid of the more fanciful story elements typically associated with the author. Season two, however, is not.

"I was a little worried that we shouldn't stretch too far away from the original themes. That was my main take on it, as long as we could keep it anchored to the real world," Gleeson explains. "I think we've done that in this series. Yes, there were those typical aspects of the King books, and I was a little afraid it would take off into a place that became removed from the everyday that we understand."

"I think Bill Hodges became a little bit of a mouth piece for that," he continues. "I fulfilled that function in the second series, of kind of grounding it, and saying there's only so much I would believe without absolute evidence. So that was a really interesting start of a journey, because it reflects Bill's own sense of being prepared to believe anything when the evidence becomes overwhelming, but always waiting until that point."

Hence the ice cream truck. In an early scene, Bill imagines having a conversation with Harry not unlike some of the more fanciful, and striking, visuals other King adaptations have produced. The white-suited villain taunts his adversary in a graveyard, popping from behind grave stones and, at one point, riding what looks like the same ice cream truck he traversed in last season.

Thankfully, as Gleeson notes, show creator and television producer David E. Kelley is there to reign things in.

"The great thing about David is that when he writes the human condition, he writes it like nobody else. So as long as we could get the right framework, then I was happy as a lark to take whatever he could throw at me. But there's a temptation to make anything possible, because it's essentially fiction."

That it is, though this doesn't mean that adapting King's three-book series to television was an easy task. For not only did the second and third books delve deeper into more supernatural facets, but the way in which King wrote about Bill and Harry's eventual reunion doesn't necessarily meet Gleeson's real-world requirements. So the creative team improvised.

"The adaptation is almost word-for-word from the books, thought it was mixed up a little bit because it had to be," says the actor. "The nature of the books made it imperative that we didn't just stick to the script. Some readjustment was necessary. And we needed to be careful, because it can be fun, but I was still trying to hold onto the practical credibility of it all."

"Mr. Mercedes" season two premieres Wednesday at 10 p.m. on the AT&T Audience Network.

Rami Malek on getting 'dirty' for 'Papillon' remake

The "Mr. Robot" star and director Michael Noer open up about their new film.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"Mr. Robot" star Rami Malek and Charlie Hunnam team up for "Papillon." BLEECKER STREET

Michael Noer and Rami Malek GETTY IMAGES

"Papillon," the 1973 adaptation of Henri Charriere's best-selling autobiography of his 14-year incarceration and stunning escape from a French penal colony of French Guiana, is rightfully regarded as a movie masterpiece. It was scored, written and directed by the Oscar-winning talents of Jerry Goldsmith, Dalton Trumbo and Franklin J. Schaffner, respectively, and starred the titanic acting talents of Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman.

Director Michael Noer and stars Charlie Hunnam and Rami Malek knew they would have to dig deep to make a distinctive and original version of the film. We recently spoke with Noer and Malek, who plays the Louis Dega to Hunnam's Charriere, and they broke-down why they decided to remake "Papillon," with Malek admitting that he was originally dubious about taking the role.

"The first thing, obviously, is the memory of the film, and my memory of reading the book is one of sentiment. There is obvious hesitation to making a film with that," says Malek. "Could anyone do it justice? The original film lives in our memory as an iconic piece of cinema history. So it is a very difficult thing to tackle, and it seems unapproachable."

"But I was convinced by that we wouldn't be in the shadows of that film, but standing on the shoulders of the book, perhaps," he adds.

Malek admits that it was Noer's vision that ultimately convinced him to join the project.

"He is very, very specific on his storytelling. He comes at things from a very philosophical place, too," says Malek. "I knew that I would be getting a director with a very distinct viewpoint. I could come to him with any ideas and we would collaborate to come up with something very unique."

Things certainly got tough while making "Papillon," as this version of Charriere's story is much dirtier and grittier than its predecessor.

"It was a very, very dirty film," Malek recalls. "In the sense that we were trudging through mud on our many, many days."

"Countless night shoots in the rain. We also shot six days out of seven," he adds. "It was one of those films that a make-up appreciates because there is less work that they need to do on you day-by-day that makes you look like you have been suffering."

Such conditions were necessary because Noer's main intention with "Papillon" was to create a vivid experience that the audience could actually smell where the characters were and what they were going through.

"Conceptually, I always reminded the make-up department, production designer and photographer that we were really trying to make a movie that smells," says Noer. "We thought it would be great if people could really smell the movie. When you are in Paris you can smell the fake perfume, when you are in the prison cells you can smell the sweat, you should be able to hear the insects, to feel them."

"The smell part of the filmmaking was a key part in conceptualizing the world," he adds. "Us achieving that is a credit to the crew, which is great for a director like me, who is still under 40, and was given a chance to play with the full vocabulary of Hollywood filmmaking. That was a great experience on a professional level."

"Papillon" opens in theaters Aug. 24.

Everything you need to know about the Philly 10K 2018

The annual road race returns this weekend.

A.D. AMOROSI

ISTOCK

It's humid and hot during the last weekend in August, probably more so than it's been all summer. A little more heat isn't going to stop the endurance runners behind this 6.2 mile stride through the most familiar parts of South Philly and Center City – just like it hasn't in the five years since the Philly 10K commenced. Yes, there are cash prizes, but that's not the point. You do this run (and please, no walkers: Philly 10K is a running race, and active participants must be able to maintain a 15 minute per mile pace) for pride and for the right to say you did so.

When is the Philly 10K 2018?
This year's Philly 10K will take place Sunday, August 26, rain or shine, starting at 7:30 a.m. on the corner of 8th and South. Bibs must be picked up, in advance, at the Philly 10K Diadora Kickoff Party at Philadelphia Brewing Company, 2440 Frankford Ave. on Friday, August 24 (starting at 4 p.m.) and Saturday, August 25 (starting at 10 a.m.) To quote, the Philly 10K's literature, "Runners have to come. Everyone can come."

Once you start the race from the 8th and South starting gate, the 6.2 mile run – a USATF Certified 10K course – will take you through the Italian Market past Broad Street into Center City and MidTown Village, then back around to 5th and South again for the finish line. There is no time schedule for the race once you commence the running (the exact course can be viewed online), but, as the after-party ends at 11 a.m. (see below), I would advise you to move fast, and carefully – no hammy pulls or heart attacks.

Philly 10K 2018 after party
Philadelphia Brewing Company, Shake Shack and Federal Donuts (the latter two getting together for a special Philly 10K creamy cold custard swirl) host the post-race bash on Bainbridge St. between 4th and 5th and 5th St. and Passyunk Ave. between South and Monroe, once you've crossed the finish line. The post-race party ends at 11 a.m.

How much does the Philly 10K cost?
Anyone can watch the Philly 10K from their windows, balconies or on the street, so that's free. Runners have to pay, in advance, $64, plus a $5 registration fee, available at runsignup.com. Registration includes a soft tri-blend Diadora race shirt you'll wear under your bib during the race, access to the post-party's Special Philly 10K Shake Shack + Federal Donuts Custard and a sold, PBC beer, a locally-produced finisher's keepsake, and – as they say at the Philly 10 K[tab]– "the ability to run care-free past as many red lights as you want through the core of the 5th largest city in the country."

Modular floating city

A luxurious city on water could soon become a reality. The Waya project, created by the Lazzarini Design studio, was inspired by Mayan architecture and partly from a Japanese temple structures. It is being crowdfunded, and set to be completed in 2022. The modular pyramids can offer different living and entertainment settings, such as hotels, shops, spa, as well as gyms, bars or cinemas. Gibson poised for big Year 2

Shelton Gibson has had a fine summer for the Eagles.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

Eagles receiver Shelton Gibson finds the end zone against New England last week. GETTY IMAGES

Around this time last year, then Eagles rookie wide receiver Shelton Gibson was struggling both in training camp and preseason. The fifth-round pick had trouble adjusting to the NFL and drops, which did not help his case to move up Philadelphia's wide receiver depth chart.

The Eagles' top three wide receivers at the time were Alshon Jeffery, Torrey Smith and Nelson Agholor. This meant that there was an opportunity for Gibson to win either the fourth or fifth wide receiver jobs.

However, it was not in the cards for the former West Virginia Mountaineer as his fellow rookie classmate Mack Hollins got the fourth spot and Marcus Johnson won the fifth spot on the depth chart.

Gibson only played in five games in 2017 and did not register a reception until the regular season finale against the Dallas Cowboys.

In that Week 17 matchup, he had two receptions for 11 yards. Outside of his limited offensive production, Gibson also saw time on the field as a gunner on special teams, playing 44 snaps.

It was a disappointing rookie campaign for Gibson, who should have played a role within the Eagles' offense.

What was that role you may ask? It was to be another vertical deep threat for head coach Doug Pederson and then offensive coordinator Frank Reich

At West Virginia, the 5-foot-11 wide receiver was a playmaker on both offense and special teams. He displayed straight-line speed that not many defensive backs could keep up with.

Over his three-year career with the Mountaineers, Gibson had 84 receptions for 1,898 yards and 17 touchdowns. His best season came as a junior in 2016, where he had a career-high 43 receptions and 951 yards for eight touchdowns.

Another underrated aspect of Gibson's game coming out of college was his ability to track the ball while in the air. If you are going to be a solid NFL wide receiver that depends on his ability to stretch the field, you need to know where the ball is.

Therefore, he could've easily pushed veteran Torrey Smith for that role last season.

Fast forward to this summer and Gibson is a totally different player. He is catching everything and making an impact in the preseason.

In two preseason games, he already has seven receptions for 167 yards and two touchdowns.

Against the Pittsburgh Steelers in Week 1, Gibson had a coming out party, blowing by cornerback Dashaun Phillips for a 63-yard touchdown. Quarterback Nate Sudfeld put the football where it needed to be and allowed him to use his speed to make a play.

After that game, Pederson explained what the difference was between this year and last year for Gibson. He led off with the word confidence.

"The biggest thing is just confidence. He obviously had a chance to play in games last year, special teams. But I think that gives him a confident feel going into the season," he said. "He did some good things tonight. He's one of the guys that's competing and competing for a roster spot."

The second-year wide receiver agreed with what his head coach said. It is all about having confidence out on the field.

"It's just confidence, man; it's just confidence — going out there and playing and having fun instead of just going out there to impress the coaches. No, just go out there and have fun."

It sure seems like Gibson is having fun on the field and it is showing. The game looks easier for him as he was able to beat another opposing cornerback with his speed in last week's game against the Patriots.

He also had a nice touchdown reception in the red zone against New England, shaking free veteran defensive back Jason McCourty.

While we can harp on Gibson's offensive production this preseason all day, his work on special teams has been good too. The 5-foot-11 wideout did an excellent job in the kick return game last Thursday.

Gibson returned four kicks for 121 yards, which averages out to 30.3 yards per return.

If the Eagles get something out of Gibson on special teams, it will give them a major boost. When you have a player with his speed and playmaking ability, he needs to be on the field often.

Nevertheless, it has been fun to watch the former Mountaineer have success this summer. Let's just hope he can continue it into the regular season.

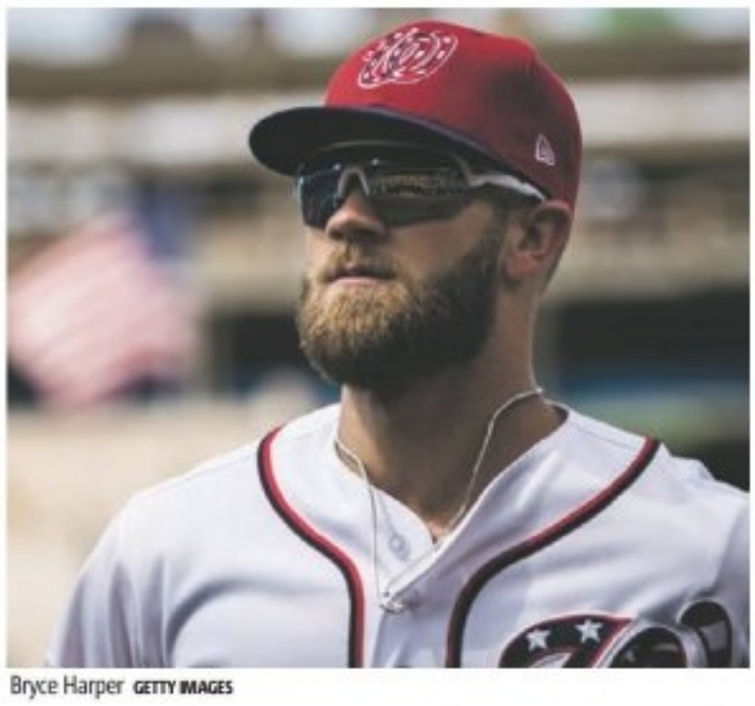
Rival GM thinks Harper will sign with Phillies

Bryce Harper will be the marquee free agent in MLB this winter.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us



Bryce Harper GETTY IMAGES

This season has been an utter disaster for the Washington Nationals and their superstar outfielder Bryce Harper. The Nationals were supposed to be the kings of the NL East, but are fading in the standings.

To make matters worse, Harper is not having a great year at the plate. After getting off to a hot start to begin the season, the six-time All-star has a slash line of .246/.380./.511 with 30 home runs and 79 RBI.

In the first half of the regular season, Harper was looking like an MVP candidate, despite hitting .214 with 23 home runs and 54 RBI.

There is also Harper's looming free agency, which could create a huge power shift in baseball this offseason.

All signs point to the 25-year-old taking his talents to the free agent market, where he could get a luxurious contract upwards of $400 million. If this is the case, then that eliminates many teams from the Bryce Harper sweepstakes.

However, one team that it does not eliminate is the Phillies. Washington's division rival has been mentioned as a potential landing spot for the outfielder and an unidentified general manager agrees with that notion.

Last week, Jon Heyman of FanCred Sports wrote in one of his Inside Baseball columns that a rival general manager thinks that Harper ends up with the Phillies.

Heyman also mentioned in his story that a person connected to the Phillies threw the idea out there that the team will talk to both Harper and Manny Machado and would not rule out the option of signing both guys.

While it is highly improbable that Philadelphia would sign both superstar free agents, Harper seems like the best fit.

As of right now, starting right fielder Nick Williams is under contract until 2024 and won't become arbitration eligible until 2021.

Even though he is playing great this season with a .264 batting average to go with 17 home runs and 49 RBI. There is no way the Phillies would turn down the opportunity to sign Harper and make Williams their fourth outfielder next season.

Couples Locking Bedroom Door (Again!) Thanks To Natural Intimacy Pill

Powerful new sex aid goes where none has gone before – straight to the brain

SAN FRANCISCO — Here's a 'behind closed doors' trivia question: Do you know the #1 complaint that prevents couples from enjoying a healthy, and fulfilling sex life?

If you guessed erectile dysfunction, you guessed right.

It is estimated that 30 million men, plus their spouses and/or partners are affected by this deflating condition.

Bliss-free Bedroom

Can you guess the next most common complaint that puts the brakes to bliss in the bedroom?

If you guessed loss of sexual desire, in both men and women, you are correct.

These are not easy problems to fix.

For men, doctors may recommend oral drugs or painful, surgical implants.

For women, hormonal therapy may be recommended.

Couples of all ages are turning back the clock with an advanced oral formula that ignites passion and performance in both men and women

The First Pill for Men ... and Women

Thanks to a stunning breakthrough in nutritional science, now there's a prescription-free discovery that not only gives men the vigorous, healthy, natural erection they've been seeking, but it also re-kindles and intensifies the flames of sexual desire in both men and women.

It's called Noxitril. It's not a drug, vitamin or mineral.

It is four, exceptionally powerful nutritional supplements squeezed into a single capsule.

Have Fun Again

Noxitril safely restores sexual enjoyment and performance by reinforcing the four pillars of sexual revitalization: boosting testosterone; elevating natural reserves of nitric oxide, or erection fuel; sparking sexual urges and libidinous desires; and energizing sexual energy and vitality.

Ask users if Noxitril works as well as prescription ED drugs, and many may say, "No, it works better!"

Noxitril formulators have fast-tracked results with the addition of an energizing ginseng blend and a proprietary mix of 13 peak-performance, firestarters including muira puma, catauba, and tribulus.

The Miracle of Rapid Tumescence

Noxitril gives men what they, and their lovers want most – rapid tumescence, or fast-developing erections.

While there are many prescription-sold drugs that boost testosterone in the body, Noxitril contains one of the only natural sources that can consistently elevate this important hormone required for satisfying intimacy.

Sexual Urges Return

Noxitril scientists have harnessed unique extracts from the tongkat ali tree in Malaysian rainforests.

Clinically tested, botanical firestarters electrify body and mind, restoring blood flow, creating sexual desire.

Biochemicals in this libido-boosting botanical have been shown in research to increase testosterone levels.

Natural Testosterone Rise

Noxitril locks-in instant-readiness by helping elevate and increase natural testosterone production.

Regardless of age or physical health, this natural boost in testosterone encourages a powerful sex drive, enhanced sexual function, more sexual energy, and a more pleasurable sexual experience for both sexes.

Confident Performance

For Noxitril user, David P., this prescription-free formula has been life-changing.*

"It helped get my confidence back to where it used to be," smiles David.

"Noxitril made me feel ready when the opportunity arises and helped me keep my love life exciting."

Locked... and Loaded

"I'd recommend this for guys who may have had any kind of trouble in the past and want to ensure they'll be ready every time," adds David.

"It's a definite confidence booster and decreases anxiety, too!"

But for men over the age of 50, increasing testosterone is, by itself, not enough to fully restore waning sexual powers.

Noxitril not only helps increase performance behind closed doors, it can also give men the potential to blow the door off its hinges!

The secret? Copious amounts of... 'erection fuel.'

Noxitril Begins with 'NO'

For a man to enjoy a healthy, robust erection, he needs ample amounts of a substance called nitric oxide, or 'NO.'

When NO levels are too low, often age-related, it becomes physically impossible for a man to achieve an erection.

Noxitril contains a fast-absorbing amino acid called L-arginine, which is readily converted to nitric oxide.

The more L-arginine a man consumes, the more nitric oxide he possesses... the more nitric oxide a man has, the larger and harder his response.

Eye-Popping Difference

Doug. F. is sold on Noxitril. "I have tried most of these new, natural male enhancements; none of them do what Noxitril does for me."

"Not only does it work fast, but I can also last for a while. I have recommended to all my friends who have the same problem."*

Works for Women, Too

Noxitril is equally effective for men and women. Like Viagra, arginine in Noxitril helps increase blood flow to the genital area, potentially increasing sensation to the sex organs and enhancing the pleasures of lovemaking... for both sexes.

Feel the Urge

Noxitril sparks sexual desire with a prized extract called Maca.

In one study a whopping 60 percent of healthy subjects experienced enhanced sexual satisfaction from using this amazing herb. The placebo group's score was just as surprising — zero percent!

In another study, test subjects were asked to consume maca, just like that found in Noxitril, exactly one hour before sexual activity.

A full two-thirds of male patients unexpectedly experienced increased penile axial rigidity, or harder erections.

New, four-in-one, nutritional supplement creates 'redwood effect' in aging males.

John M., age 67, says that Noxitril has made his life so easy. "No more doctor's visits, no more prescriptions, and no more side effects," laughs John.*
